From the Dentist: Why Traditional Braces?

Do you have a child that may need help with their crooked smile? Were braces in your past and possibly in their future? You may be surprised at how young your child should be when you first need to start checking it out! These problems are easier to correct if detected earlier. Keep in mind that some teens are so worried about their appearance. When bringing up braces, one thing to try is to point out is that most people who need orthodontic treatment look like a geek even before they get braces. How would you like to go through life with buck teeth and a jaw that is too big or too small? If your child is really concerned about their appearance, then braces will really help them. Your smile is the most striking feature on your face, and at the end of orthodontic treatment you child's smile will look fabulous. Doesn't your child want to look fabulous?

Tip of the Month : Valentine Flowers

Tools and Materials

- Colored paper
- 24-gauge wire
- Small beads
- Ribbon
- Floral tape or glue
- Scissors
- How-To

1. Cut out five to eight hearts of the same size, and inscribe them. Use a pushpin to make a hole near the pointed end of each heart.
2. For a wire stem, thread a small bead onto a piece of 24-gauge wire cut a little longer than you want the stem to be; twist the wire so the bead stays at the end. Thread hearts on the other end until all the hearts are stacked against the bead. Twist the wire again to keep the hearts in place. Cover the stem with floral tape, or glue ribbon around the wire.
3. For a ribbon stem, thread a bead to the center of a 3-inch length of wire, and bend the wire in half. Send the ends through the hole in each heart. On the back, form the two ends into a small loop around the midpoint of a length of ribbon; trim the excess wire.
